Maintenance and care of Instruments

A very large proportion of Surgical Instruments manufactured today are of stainless steel of the appropriate grade. Though it has definite advantages there is a lot of misconceptions and wrong perception about the very word “Stainless Steel”. As a user you may have come across problems with your “Stainless Steel” Instruments Viz. CORROSION, PITTING, SPOTTING, STAINING ETC. Our Ready Reckoner in the following page will answer Cause and Solution to most of these problems.

Apart from “Technical” problems there are various other reason due to which the life of a surgical Instrument is substantially reduced. A little more care at the user end would go a long way in ensuring that an instrument remains as good as new even after years of use. Our guidelines on maintenance is simple to follow and easy to implement in your organization.

It is possible that you have a problem that is different from those identified by us being most common. We would only be happy to hear from you and offer our recommendations.
